INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THE Marian Registers are not as a rule very interesting and this Register of Whyte is no exception. In the southern province the Registers of Canterbury (Sede vacante and Pole) and of London (Bonner restored) are the most valuable. Some important documents are to be found at Chichester, Rochester, and Wells, while the group of Registers containing the Acts of Voysey (restored) and Turbervile at Exeter stand out conspicuous for fulness and method. But as a rule the records are jejune and muddled. The Winchester registrar does not distinguish himself. When Gardiner was restored and superseded Ponet, he confined himself to registering the institutions and collations, but made chaos of them by repetitions and transpositions. When Whyte succeeded in 1556, he began well with the full Acts of the Enthronement, and two commissions for a Vicar-General. But after that great effort he was content to do no more than register collations and institutions.

Perhaps Whyte himself was not encouraging. We know that he did not come to be enthroned in person, and there is little sign of his active participation in the work of the diocese. Wykehamist though he was, by education, offices, and associations, he was apparently mainly employed elsewhere than in his diocese, after he had procured his translation thither from Lincoln. The main outline of his life may be gathered from the notice of him in the Dictionary of National Biography; and his Register adds nothing to that, but these negative reflections.

The account of the enthronement contains no special points of interest, except for the transitional state of things which it reveals. The old position has gone, for the Winchester Chapter is no longer monastic: but the Latin rites and ceremonies are observed once more before the English form of them takes their place in the new order of things.

The two Commissions for the Vicar-General are in two common forms; the second amplifies the first in certain respects; and differs from it, among other things, in making reference to Pole's Synodal Constitutions, and to Regulars, who had now been restored in four or five places, most recently and most notably at Westminster in November 1556. This restoration has also left its mark on other pages of the Register, for two of the vacancies which were filled in December 1556 were due to the late incumbent's entry into religion, and two more cases occurred in the February following. (pp. 18, 19, notes.)

The only sign of deprivation which appears, is in an entry of January 1, 1559. It probably is not connected with any question of the religious controversies of the day. Resignations are few, and death is the usual cause of vacancy. Patronage seems to be changing hands: Jane, Lady Southampton appoints to four benefices in eighteen months, so possibly she had been buying up advowsons. One of them, at any rate, that of Kingsworthy, had been, fifteen months before her appointment, in the hands of Stuarde, the Vicar-General, as representative of the Abbot of Hyde. But the institutions are too few to serve as basis for any secure deductions.

Whyte's affection for the two Colleges of Wykeham continued steadfast to his death. In August 1555, nearly a year after he had resigned the Wardenship of Winchester, he sent to the two Wardens a cup to "remayne as an ymplemente of the electyon hereafter" and as "Election Cup" it stills survives at Winchester College. At his death he left legacies to both Colleges; among the valuables left to Winchester College were a crozier and a mitre, which were duly received and acknowledged; but they must before long have been treated as "monuments of superstition" under the new regime, to which the bishop himself had fallen a victim. His first experience of it resulted from the funeral sermon of Queen Mary in which he made disparaging references to Elizabeth.[1] This only cost him a month's forced retirement in his own house. His latest presentation is of March 30, 1559 —and significantly too: for on the following day he began his part in the Westminster Abbey disputation, which landed him in the Tower. He was deprived at Midsummer, and died on the 11th or 12th of January, 1560, having spent the last six months in his sister's house at South Warnborough, Hants.

His successor, Horne, was not consecrated till Feb. 27, 1561, and his presentations began on March 26. The records in the interval are to be found in the Canterbury Sede vacante Register of 1558, 9, at f. 90, and subsequently in the Parker Register, pp. 202-214.

Whyte's Register consists of fourteen leaves of vellum (18 in. by 12½ in.), bound in a modern binding. The lower right hand corner of the first leaf is gone, causing the gaps in the first document, which are noticeable below on pp. 2, 4.
